The SALUTA Journal has become a space for dissemination of research of our health sciences faculty, a valuable tool for students, teachers and writers from other instances who want to qualify their articles to be published in this written and digital media of great importance for UMECIT.

UMECIT, an avant-garde university with a dynamic process of digital transformation, has achieved that through the cyberhumanist academic curricular model, the various faculties are articulated in teaching, research and extension, through technological mediation to achieve significant results in a university education according to what is lived in the fifth lustrum of the XXI century.

In the case of our faculty of health sciences, faced with the challenges generated by the COVID-19 pandemic, a process of analysis of the demands and requirements of health professionals was carried out and a reflective diagnosis was undertaken with scientific experts from the country and the region, resulting in the implementation of an innovative portfolio of new careers in the area of bachelor's degrees, specializations, master's degrees and doctorates in accordance and relevant to face the great challenges that are currently being experienced.

In the scientific part UMECIT, establishes the Bioethics Committee, which submits it to the approval of local authorities in order to ensure that the resulting research products such as thesis, disciplinary research, etc., are approved preserving clinical ethics and rational argumentation, through the objective analysis of the personalities that comprise it.

On the practical side, UMECIT invests heavily in infrastructure, laboratories, simulators and human resources so that students of the various disciplines in the field of health have the best facilities and the best conditions to achieve the training that the country requires of these professionals for their development and growth. On the other hand, very important agreements have been reached with government agencies, as well as private companies (Ministry of Health, employers, San Fernando Hospital, among others) so that students can achieve the best practice of their knowledge.

Relevant plans, competent and committed faculty facilitators, appropriate infrastructure and state-of-the-art technology and the best students are the guidelines present in the development plan of the Faculty of Health Sciences of UMECIT for the current five-year period, the result of which will be the achievement of professionals in different health fields that will provide the size and solutions to public health problems and improve the indicators to have a much healthier country and a much healthier region.

I would like to thank all the people who have submitted their articles to be published in the SALUTA Journal, congratulate them for having been selected and invite them to continue making research the possibility of creating knowledge and disseminating it to be shared by the academic communities. We hope that this new issue will be to your liking and will meet the readers expectations.
